PERSONAL COLUMN

You may look out for something next September. Aleister Crowley, an Englishman, in April republished for the fourth time his "Book of Magic," which makes things happen. Other publications brought on nine months after, such disasters as the Balkan War, the last Great War, and the Sino-Japanese war. The catastrophes are let loose by the might of released "Magic." The book was formally published at dawn, an Englishman, a Jew, a Malayan, an Indian, and a Negro assisting. Don't say we didn't warn you.
